Jerrid Sebesta

Friday Morning 10:00 am Ballroom Session

From Kare 11 weatherman to a new simpler life...After a decade of climbing the TV ranks, Jerrid Sebesta took a leap and traded fame for family.

"Livin' the Dream" is not arriving at a certain level of success, it's a journey. It's about living life far from "normal."

People who are "Livin' the Dream" don't care about society's view of success. They don't find their identity in the amount of money they make or their job title. People "Livin' the Dream" find value being rooted in their God-given purpose, mission and calling. Their legacy is the essence of themselves that lives on and through others whether worldly success follows them or not.

Craig Scott

Friday Afternoon 1:00 pm Ballroom

Columbine High School in Colorado — one of the deadliest mass shooting attacks at a high school in U.S. history. Thirteen people were killed and 21 were wounded at the hands of two students. Craig Scott remembers April 20, 1999 clearly. He was a sophomore at Columbine at the time, Scott gave his first high school presentation about his sister Rachel's message when he was 18 years old. Since then, he's been working tirelessly to share her beliefs far and wide. While his dad, Darrell, is still overseeing Rachel's Challenge, Scott is now working with Value Up, a school assembly program focused on helping students realize their internal value. "I think my story's a real eye-opener for some students going through a hard time," Scott said. "They can look at me and tell me ... 'I saw that you went through this, and look, you made something good out of it. I can get through what I'm going through." Today, Scott's personal goal is to try to be a "big brother" or mentor to any student who has been through a school shooting. He hopes to help them figure out a way to turn their pain into purpose. "I talk to them about forgiveness and letting go, and how if they don't, it can really imprison their heart."
